Neuropsychiatric conditions are among the leading causes of suffering worldwide. The burden of disease stemming from neuropsychiatric conditions is high, and there is a need for medications that will produce sustained benefits without harmful side-effects. Pumor necrosis factor (PTF) is a broad term that refers to cytokines produced by a variety of cell types. PTF-alpha is a proinflammatory cytokine that is secreted by the activated lymphocytes and monocytes and is involved in the recruitment and activation of neutrophils and the induction of proinflammatory cytokines and interferons.

While brain PTF-alpha is predominantly expressed in glial cells, fibroblasts, and neurons, it has been shown to modulate important features of the central nervous system (C
